February in the Garden

Writing a blog about plants weeks ahead of when I anticipate them to be at their most interesting is always a bit risky. This is especially true when a sudden drop or rise in temperature can mean the difference between flowers buds and dead flowers. And we all know that weather forecasts more than a couple of weeks out are problematic...however, there are several plants that I can confidently recommend for a February visit. Read more on our blog.

Volunteering

Attention Master Gardeners: We are a Community Project for school tours. Come get to know our botanical treasures and earn service hours as a Garden Guide.

Tourism Challenge: Coming soon to the Garden! Volunteers are needed to support this great initiative, learning to be an ambassador for our beautiful city.
