February in the Garden

Phyllostachys bambusoides 'McClure's Castillonis'

Partly because of the size and scale of the David C. Lam Asian Garden, but also because of the predominance of other mid-level shrubs, the Botanical Garden's bamboo collection is often overlooked, or at least, hidden by competing foliage. There have always been a few bamboos in the Garden's collection, but about a decade ago, a large number of mostly Chinese bamboos were donated to the Botanical Garden. These plants are now approaching a size where it is now difficult to ignore them. And because of the lack of deciduous leaf cover in the winter, all of our bamboos stand out with particular lushness in February, making it an excellent time to have a look at them.
