Schefflera fantsipanensis

November in the Garden

Not long ago, while walking in the David C. Lam Asian Garden, I thought to myself, where did all of these scheffleras come from? Considering that scheffleras are mostly known as tropical plants best known from shopping mall atriums and office building landscapes, it would seem an unlikely group to see at UBC Botanical Garden. Nevertheless, a few high-mountain Schefflera species from Southeast Asia, mostly not well-known or previously thought frost-tender, are showing themselves, at least initially, to be good garden plants here.

Children's Wreath Workshop

Sunday, December 8th, 2019, 9:30 am – 12:00 pm

Come deck the halls and craft with us at the Garden. This festive workshop is designed for children ages 6-12 and will guide children how to create their very own handmade holiday wreath using plant materials from the Garden. The second half of the workshop will include a short walking tour in the Garden, highlighting some of the plants featured for wreaths. Additional holiday wreaths are for sale at our Shop in the Garden during the holiday season.
